

CIEH Level 3 Award in Training Skills and Practice

Health and Safety Courses for Staff, Managers and Business Owners

Who should attend

Anyone who needs to either understand the basics of training practice, or wants to refine their training techniques. Those who have never delivered training before will find it an ideal basis for their future training activities

Why you should attend

This is minimum requirement for anyone wishing to register to deliver CIEH qualifications in food safety, health and safety and environmental protection without government funding – for example, in the workplace

What you will learn

The qualification will enable successful candidates to understand and put into practice the following:

- How training can best be delivered to secure effective learning
- How to structure and design training sessions
- How to make training sessions interesting, stimulating and relevant.

Course content

- An understanding of your own role and responsibilities in relation to training
- An understanding of appropriate training and learning approaches in a specialist area
- Demonstration of your session planning skills
- An understanding of how to deliver inclusive sessions that motivate learners
- An understanding of the use of different assessment methods and the need for record keeping

Accreditation
